"I built the website viennapool.org. It's on the blue yard signs you see around town. The website leverages the prior hard work of several concerned Town residents who initially raised the red flag. Those residents previously spread the word about what they see as the inconvenient facts regarding the proposed pool. Their objections are as clear now as they were then, yet the decision to build a pool still lingers. The FY26 Town calendar indicates we are proceeding with the design of a new pool. Why are we proceeding with the pool design? A survey asking whether Vienna residents prefer an indoor or outdoor pool is the basis of this project, but that survey no longer seems appropriate given that it is unclear whether there is broad support for what would be the largest capital expenditure in Vienna's history. Before we spend hundreds of thousands of dollars refining a pool design, it seems critical to ask Vienna residents a more fundamental question: do we want to dedicate $25 million in construction costs to a pool? Do we want approximately $1 million in annual interest payments? Do we want another $1 million in annual operating losses for an aquatic center in our Town? I will speak for everyone who has a sign in their yard, the dozens of people I have spoken with who do not like yard signs, and the dedicated residents who originally pointed out the concerns about this project. Please do not proceed with the design of this pool. Please do not hire a project manager. Please do not burden every household in Vienna with hundreds more dollars in annual subsidies for a pool many residents may or may not use. Please do not assume that our AAA bond rating means we should spend on marginal luxuries such as this pool. We already have enough information to know that the lot is too small and the cost too large. I have heard from Vienna residents. I have spoken with people in larger homes and smaller homes, older residents and younger residents, Democrats and Republicans, many of whom do not want the financial burden of this pool. To those who ask for a pool, please understand that you are asking all taxpayers to significantly subsidize it. The request for a special-interest pool is simply too large. The level of support for a $25 million pool does not appear sufficient given the financial impact on Vienna taxpayers who do not want it. Town Council, please ask Vienna residents whether we want a $25 million, non-self-sustaining pool before we spend any more money on pool design. Thank you."

"I'm a 16-year-old sophomore at Oakton High School, and I was driving around Vienna when I noticed the blue signs in people's yards. I started wondering why some people don't want a pool, so I went to the website and read the points that were posted there. I realized I didn't fully understand some of the arguments being made against the pool, so I talked about it with my dad, who is an aquatics instructor with the Boy Scouts. I'm also a Boy Scout and have a lot of experience in aquatics. I actually received a lifesaving medal at the National Court of Honor recently as part of Scouts in Action, so water safety and swimming are things that are important to me. When we talked about the proposed pool, we both thought it sounded like a great idea and we're interested to see how the project moves forward. The biggest question I had for the people who oppose the pool is: what do you think should go there instead? The Town already owns the lot, so if the pool isn't built, what would be a better use of the space? That was really my main question after looking at the website. From what I've also read, it could be a good investment opportunity through bonds for residents in Vienna. I think I might even purchase some bonds to support the pool myself. I think it could be a really good addition to the community. Thank you very much."

"Our Town Clerk is passing out books to each of you, and once those are distributed, I will begin. Now that you've been inundated with paper, I'll start. I want to briefly go through the tabs, and I'm going to concentrate on three things. Tab one references what facilities Vienna residents said they wanted most in the Parks and Recreation Plan. Number one was a swimming pool and number four was a fitness center. Also included there is an article titled "The Nine Benefits of Water Workouts," which highlights how powerful swimming can be as exercise, particularly because it does not put stress on the joints. Tab two outlines the scope of the health problem in our country. The numbers are striking—72% of adults have unhealthy weight, more than half have diabetes or prediabetes, and heart disease remains the number one killer. Tab three addresses health care costs related to inactivity. Approximately $117 billion in health care costs are attributed to physical inactivity. Regular exercise helps address many of these health issues. In tab four, the benefits are outlined. For teens and children, exercise improves cognition, heart health, and reduces the risk of depression. For adults, it lowers the risk of all-cause mortality, reduces the risk of cardiovascular disease, reduces anxiety, improves sleep, and improves overall quality of life. If you could please put up the graph that's included in tab four. When you look at that graph, it really makes you say "wow." If you are sedentary—moving from one chair to another, to bed and back again—you significantly increase your risk of early death. If you exercise regularly, you live longer and healthier. The graph really speaks for itself. Exercise improves memory, strengthens bones and muscles, and reduces the risk of chronic diseases like type 2 diabetes and obesity. For young people, one of the most important things is that those who exercise early in life tend to continue those habits as adults. Starting later in life is possible, but it's much easier if the pattern begins when you're young. For adults, exercise improves sleep quality, reduces anxiety, reduces blood pressure, and lowers the risk of heart disease, stroke, and type 2 diabetes. It also lowers the risk of developing dementia and reduces the risk of several cancers, including bladder, breast, colon, esophagus, kidney, lung, and stomach. There are two other charts I'd like you to see. The first shows how one acre of the three-acre annex property could be used. The second, which is included in tab seven, shows how the square footage could be divided among the different components of the facility. If you look at the first page of tab seven, you'll see the layout, including the pool area with a zero-entry level and a fitness center on the second floor. Altogether it would be about 52,000 square feet. It would be a wonderful facility that helps promote a healthier Vienna. We already have a very safe community, and we should be just as concerned about having a very healthy community. Thank you very much."
